General Comment

What is the point of copyright laws, meant to protect the works of the people making the effort to make them, if a company is allowed to ignore them for personal profit? You are granting a unreasonable license for something with very little and narrow use case, that cannot be undone, and leaves no recourse from the effort that this company steals from. This is entirely unacceptable. Generative 'AI' functions only on the stolen work of others which is why and how it exist today, but such theft should not be made legal and those harmed by it should have legal recourse not stolen from them as well.
