General Comment

The attempt to give "OpenAI" immunity from lawsuits nor without proper compensation will prove further detrimental to the United States and thus worsen the ties with allies abroad. This has no jurisdiction to most governing bodies outside of the United States, even if "OpenAI" is within the confines of the World Wide Web it isn't subject to such immunities. Eventually the United States will only have its new "allies" to communicate with after their old allies leave them in the dark. There'll never be such a thing as AI "art", only theft and amalgamation of other's art. Your government will be held responsible by its people and old allies in the end and even merciful that said government isn't forced to compensate the artists of its country for the damages already inflicted. However, in the end it SHOULD be the result for even considering such absentminded industrialization of OUR work, it's not yours to take.
