General Comment

I am a writer. I have published a best-selling book, viral articles on multiple sites, and unbelievable numbers of words on blogs. I have spent literal decades honing my craft, so many hours working so hard for very little money.

But I have made money from my writing — not enough, but enough to get by, to pay for my apartment, to go on vacations, even to put a little aside. I have been able to do this work because I'm good at what I do, and I'm good at what I do because I have spent thousands of hours working on my writing.

MLM and AI wants to steal my work. The makers of these models say that their business can't be profitable without stealing my work. They say that if they can't run rampant through my work — and the work of many artists such as myself — their business isn't sustainable.

Good. They should fail. Stealing copyrighted material is illegal. It's immoral. And it's taking food off my table. It's profiting from my work, and it's making the world poorer in the process.

If MLM and AI can't do what they do without stealing work, they should fail. The end. It's immoral, it's wrong, it's harmful, and it must stop.
