General Comment

Artificial Intelligence is a scourge on the creative sector. It deprives millions of their livelihoods as writers, visual artists, musicians, and filmmakers. To create its monstrous content it depends on “training” on the copyrighted works of millions of people who have spent years of their lives and millions and millions of dollars to create these works. The original creators are not credited nor compensated (in fact, generative AI is more likely to create fictitious citations) and are further put out of work by the AI apparatus. This doesn’t even get into the high cost of environmental and electrical resources that generative AI relies on to operate. This is a horrible idea all around.
