General Comment

I don't think you all quite understand how dangerous this notion is. This removes the defense for all artists - ALL - against AI stealing there work, and legitamizes excessive tracing and selling of said work as if it was their own.

We shouldn't just be focusing on AI, we should be allowing all fields, equally, to flourish. This makes AI an excessively domineering force in the market of art, music, and every media-related banner, removing our right as humans (and americans) to sell and promote things we made ourselves, with our hands.

This not only puts millions of american artists, musicians, photographers, you name it in financial risk, but stymes growth in those fields for everyone who isn't using AI. It is a fact AI makes art cheaper and faster, and we shouldn't be selling shoddy products to the world. That deligitamizes us.
