General Comment

"Artificial Intelligence", more accurately called generative imagery, is software that necessitates skirting of copyright law and fair use in order to function at its most basic level. AI companies have been caught red handed stealing the creations of hard-working artists, photographers, designers, writers, and essentially any other enthusiastic citizen inclined to creativity. The software they peddle has one functional purpose: remove those people from the money-making equation by allowing free or cheap generation of imagery for those looking to save a buck. It puts hard-working Americans out of business and promotes a laziness of thought and emotion that is detrimental to our collective consciousness. It is nothing more than a novelty, a parlor trick, diminishing returns at the expense of our souls.
