General Comment

To whom it may concern,

America's entire capitalist system is based on the idea that someone should be able to profit off their labor. We have already seen that production studios, gaming companies, and a host of other corporations would love to replace human workers with AI they do not have to pay.

Forget all the questions we should be asking about what it means to be human, if you need to. If groups like OpenAI are allowed to have unfettered access to copyrighted material, the creative economy--a chief export of our nation--will cease to function, as companies will have no motivation to pay humans. Allowing OpenAI this level of access with set them up to monopolize any industry that relies on human creativity. As long OpenAI charges just a little less than an actual human, companies will be financially incentivized to fire people in favor or digitized facsimiles. The resulting blow to our economy should not be underestimated.

This government represents the people; the people have been clear: OpenAI's theft of copyrighted material must be stopped. It certainly must not be expanded.
