General Comment

I do not believe AI holds a place in the future of the USA. AI steals from my livelihood directly as an American and profits off of theft of my services.

As a United States citizen, we are taught in our schools that we are a nation with a government formed of the people, by the people, for the people. We are told that our government represents the voices of all within its borders. We learn how laws are made, and how checks and balances exist to make sure no one branch usurps another. We are touted by our governing body as the superior form of government - that our nation is above reproach simply because it's a democracy, and therefore must be the best because the voices of the people are heard, respected, and laws are created to reflect that. And in this matter regarding AI, I question if that is true.

Prioritizing efforts in using AI to replace and displace people's livelihoods for corporate profit are morally reprehensible, and are not interested in the greater good of their fellow man. Many close to me have felt the pain and anguish of seeing their livelihood torn asunder for the sake of saving money. Dozens having their creative works stolen and fed through an AI engine to create what they believe is art experience a soul-crushing wound in their souls.

The term art is defined as "the expression or application of human creative skill and imagination...producing works to be appreciated primarily for their beauty or emotional power". Note that the key element in all art created is through the human condition - anyone could paint a night sky, but it was the lived human experiences and life that Vincent VanGogh had within him that led to the creation of one of the worlds most famous works. Art is irrevocably intertwined with the pain and pleasure of being human, and to sanction its subservience to being fodder for corporate bottom lines feels like a cruelty most inhumane.

And that terrifies me.
