General Comment

AI is fraud-based industry, intent on destroying the very people and industries that it claims to require to function. These industries, including the creative and art industries, are driven by real human beings, whose lives and well-being will be under threat by this salacious tool. It isn't a matter of national security, nor progress, or any other nice-sounding implication of altruism --it's a grift by an ill-meaning oligarch, looking to take dollars out of hard working American pockets by robbing them with their own knife. It's a sick volley for power, nothing more. Least of all, if it's truly an important matter, then those whose work will be used to train these systems should be offered lucrative compensation for any work used--as their efforts yield immeasurably more value than any current AI--as evidenced by OpenAI and others perpetual theft and copyright infringing chicanery. If it's important, PAY FOR IT. If you want it, BUY IT. GET PERMISSION. MAKE YOUR OWN. This is America, isn't it, or is that only true when it's convenient? Tell Altman to pull himself up by his bootstraps, get permission from creators, and sign some checks or GET LOST. With no due respect.
