General Comment

These AI companies are attempting to cover for their incompetence and failure to deliver anything resembling what was promised by shifting the blame to 'burdensome regulations'.

We cannot sacrifice the United States creativity economic market, which relies heavily on robust copyright protections, for these snake oil salesmen. If these people had any ability to deliver on what they say, they would have done so by now, given their blatant flaunting of already-existing law.

They cannot be worth tearing up decades of copyright law. Imagine, Donald, if they train their AI on old episodes of The Apprentice? Who then will pay you royalties?
