General Comment

As a writer and creative person, I do not support OpenAI and other AI firms determination to ignore copyrighted work in order to train their LLMs.

They get upset when other companies scrape their code in order to build competing LLMs. Well, that's how we feel when people like Sam Altman want to steal our work to build his company. He wants to profit off of our work without compensating us for that work.

If we aren't allowed to steal another writer's work--if I cannot simply publish a book called "The Stand" about a plague and never mind that Stephen King person--then they should not be able to steal our work.
