

PUBLIC SUBMISSION

As of: March 21, 2025
Received: March 15, 2025
Status: [REDACTED]
Tracking No. m8b-2qb7-2vu3
Comments Due: March 15, 2025
Submission Type: API

Docket: NSF_FRDOC_0001
Recently Posted NSF Rules and Notices.

Comment On: NSF_FRDOC_0001-3479
Request for Information: Development of an Artificial Intelligence Action Plan

Document: NSF_FRDOC_0001-DRAFT-8523
Comment on FR Doc # 2025-02305

Submitter Information

Name: Kyle Gardner

[REDACTED]

General Comment

I can't imagine a worse dereliction of duty than to grant these A.I. companies the ability to completely evade the current systems put in place to protect the rights of artists everywhere. Seems quite clear that, if granted, this will be nothing more than a blatant attempt to create a two-tiered system, one set of laissez faire rules for moneyed interests, who will be allowed anything they want, and strict "Stay out of these protected gardens" limits for the hoi polloi.

I can only predict that this will lead to many unpredictable outcomes, as it will become a fight for creative, financial, and personal survival. Speaking entirely as a writer who records and shares his writing online, lacking a local social network, it may force a shift away from the digitally connected future and towards more analog, disconnected methods. Various digital services have already been so cluttered by the presence of generatively created garbage as to severely degrade their usability. If actual people start to pull out, if the Internet becomes a tool of oppression, it will eventually be abandoned; the digital age coming to an end.

After all, the thieves can only steal what they can grab, what they have access to. If they require my output to hone their infringing plagiarism tools, then I shall deny them, even if doing so limits my reach. Whatever damage is done will be a small thing next to the greater extent I shall avoid. If you think the various sub and counter cultures which comprise the core of the internet will not make similar preservative measures, than you are chronically offline and are in way over your head.