General Comment

The main thing I would like to get across is that the United States should NOT be making any special considerations or exceptions to laws or rules for AI. AI companies have consistently oversold and overblown the capabilities of their systems, all in service of getting investment to make massive amounts of money for products which have never delivered on its promises. It would be a great shame if they managed to sell a bridge to the American government as well. AI has not shown anything to convince a reasonable person that it's "the future" and it has not done anything to earn our investment.

What AI has managed to do, however, is commit massive amounts of intellectual property theft. AI companies have continually trained their products on copyrighted writing, copyrighted art, a variety of other copyrighted works, and User data and comments on various social media. It is all theft. It's ridiculous that AI companies have been allowed to get away with it up to this point. It would be, beyond ridiculous, an insult to EVERY American who has created, with their own mind and body, art or writing or anything else if AI companies are given special privileges to train on copyrighted works.

AI is not the future of America. Don't let AI companies run rampant over our laws.
