General Comment

I oppose generative AI for many reasons, including its environmental impacts (it takes huge amounts of water and electricity to run), the exploitation of labor that has gone into what little content moderation there is (from prison labor in Finland to extremely low-wage work in various African countries), and, most importantly for this particular conversation, the fact that Large Language Models are a form of plagiarism, as they steal the words and intellectual labor from human creatives without credit, permission, or compensation. Generative AI is wasting energy, harming the environment, ripping off human artists and writers, spitting out incorrect information left and right, and tempting students to cheat instead of learn. We need more guardrails and less generative AI.
