General Comment

I do not believe the development of AI tools should be protected in light of its extremely exploitative practices and useless applications. Developers in this industry have repeatedly admitted that LLM technologies used for generative AI cannot function without scraping the resources of copyrighted human creativity. That is not a business, it is theft. The applications of generative AI are highly exaggerated and this technology has largely existed as a corporate effort to fleece the American public for the sake of profit margins. Removing guardrails from this industry would not be in the interest of artists and creatives and would damage their livelihoods.
