General Comment

The essence of a creative work is the connection to the artist, a fellow human being who is revealing some connection they have to the shared human experience. Generative AI is nothing more than a thief who steals that connection and reduces it to a soulless morass of the least common denominator. That is not even touching on the massive environmental cost that comes with operating the server farms that are necessary for AI products. AI is not worth investing in, all it will do is deprive artists of the opportunities to express themselves and earn a living while doing so. To wave copyright law to allow AI models to be trained on copywriten works would be the lowest form of theft.
