General Comment

the idea of Artificial intelligence presented by the private sector, specifically within the realm of generative AI, has proven time and time again over its life in the public consciousness that it is nothing more than a scam disguised as a technological breakthrough. The proposed executive order (or the revoking of a past executive order) would have us believe that the private companies developing this generative AI are doing so to "innovate" and "lead" this field of technology, while anyone working in any field that has been affected by its widespread use is able to see the damage it causes firsthand, even with the current restrictions. Made out to be much more advanced than it is to gain support from people too quick to embrace and implement it, genAI has created an almost unusable internet within only a few short years, overflowing with a digital landfill of misinformation. This doesn't even touch upon the blatant theft of every artistic field and industry, in which generative AI serves no purpose yet companies seem to be deeply invested in ruining.

That landfill of believable lies is entirely by design. This side of artificial intelligence which the previous order seeks to address cannot be "enhanced" in a way that supports our country or the world at large, as at its core it exists to tear down everything around it, in an effort to mindlessly and effortlessly churn out something worse for easy profit. To support these companies by removing the already minimal responsibility and restrictions that they currently face would spit in the face of any ideas of safety, privacy, or copyright law our country currently holds, and harm every citizen outside of these companies who only seek to make money from people gullible enough to invest in their scam. Generative AI's "entrepreneurial spirit," as described by the recent executive order itself, is siphoned from the spirit of the people who actually care about their field and profession, who the AI seeks to replace while being unable to exist without them in the first place.
