General Comment

This is the definition of both wastefulness and madness. The very companies pushing for this (OpenAI and its shareholders) routinely admit that their technology generates no value and consumes more resources than entire cities can provide. OpenAI and their ilk have already plundered the entirety of the internet for their boondoggle, and only to produce an unfathomably expensive and burdensome system of confident lies and hallucinations. Their machine has demonstrated that its only use is for generating poisonous trash including libel, dangerous legal and medical advice, and fabricated pornography of unwilling subjects.

Unfettering these grossly irresponsible people, and their serially criminal "industry", from basic laws only empowers them to intellectually cripple the entire English-speaking world and further undermine the very concept of truth.

The only parties who stand to benefit from this are a tiny class of ultra-wealthy technocrats and any craven politicians who beg at their feet for scraps. If anything, the opposite course must be pursued: doing whatever is necessary to remove these corrupt actors from the public forever. No venture that claims it can only succeed by stealing and lying and bribery should be rewarded for that behavior, least of all by preemptively excusing it for the same.

This nonsense is nothing but a blunt and childish attempt to dodge criticism of their awful conduct.
