

2/28/2025 via FDMS

Addison Rubin

It's dangerous. I truly believe without a doubt in my mind that it will do more harm than good, and it could be dangerous if people in the government are reckless with this idea. A.I not only steals our information, takes away jobs, is harmful to the environment (not that the government cares), and is the leading cause of critical thinking skills, but it also makes us less human. But those I worry for the most are those who are born into this generation. A.I stifles the imagination of children and family connection. Little kids who have cell phones already seem to be void of emotions; imagine what this could do. A.I should in no way be used in school systems. (not that the government cares about our countries schools either). People shouldn't be able to have easy access to A.I, it should only be used in a career setting such as labs and it should only be used by jobs that absolutely need it. I do believe that it can help in medicine and engineering studies, but it should not be all over the internet where adults and kids can use it recklessly. It has already stolen too much- even artists who think that their jobs are safe from a.i are disproven. I'm terrified of everything that has to do with this, and I feel everyone around me become more and more isolated around me, even my teachers who are using these tools to create assignments. The funny thing is A.I is mostly wrong and is not a good studying source. I was suicidal before, but now I truly know that there is nothing. Nothing good will happen in the future if nothing is done about this. And the government simply does not care, and it's upsetting, but no body will listen. We were doomed from the start. A.I is definitely being put in the wrong hands. - Addison Rubin, 17 years old, NJ