

From: Chaotic Crafting Hobbit
To: ostp-ai-rfi
Subject: [External] AI Action Plan
Date: Monday, March 17, 2025 9:14:10 AM

CAUTION: This email originated from outside your organization. Exercise caution when opening attachments or clicking links, especially from unknown senders.

First I think we need to be very clear in the fact that there are many types of "AI". Some that can work for the good of the nation like diagnosing illnesses and helping moderate online spaces to protect children and victims of abuse so that a human doesn't have to be exposed to traumatizing images. Others that are tools to help artists and writers, like spellcheckers. Though I would argue even some of these "AI" came become crutches that people rely on rather than learning from their mistakes.

Generative AI however only exists to make money from theft. It takes the creativity and hard work of Americans and people from around the world to generate images, writing, and code for nothing but profit. It takes one thing that was truly human, expressing our humanity through artwork, and puts it in the hands of a machine. These companies should not have the right to steal all of the art, writing and coding that humanity has produced to make a profits for a few. They should not be replacing human jobs with stolen collective knowledge and experience.

I feel like this would be a detriment to not just the US but the human race if we allow these companies to steal all the creative hard work of humanity because it would slowly cause people to stop trying to be artists and writers as well as coders; the very thing that made it possible to do. If only because it will become increasingly difficult to compete with the collective skill of humanity and speed that generative AI boasts. Could there be a time where no one makes real art, new books and challenging themselves to write code? Maybe not in our lifetime, but we can see how technology has already made many people lazier, angrier, and more stupid. Who's to say we won't become a nation of idiots who are constantly being stimulated by generated entertainment?

All e-mails to and from this account are for NITRD official use only and subject to certain disclosure requirements.

If you have received this e-mail in error, we ask that you notify the sender and delete it immediately.