I am opposed to any government effort to waive copyright or sanction theft of produced work or existing personal data or information just to make AI succeed. If AI cannot succeed without this waiver of intellectual property law and individual rights, then its development is not worth pursuing at this scale. At this time this effort reads more like a giant welfare subsidy to AI developers than the federal government investing in vital scientific research. If we need to cut funds for cancer research, there is no way the government should be subsidizing glorified search engines. If AI is as full of potential as its proponents claim, then it can pay for itself, and pay for the data it takes to build the programs. This document is approved for public dissemination.
