I do not believe AI holds a place in the future of the US. This technology creates derivative, inconsistent results that have no true practical advantage.

AI steals from my livelihood as an American and profits off of theft. It scrapes the work of creative endeavors in an attempt to remove the human component from creative endeavors. Artists, writers, and more will suffer severe financial repercussions that will resonate through the economy. These artists do not see compensation or even credit for their forced contribution to a technological product. If a business model demands theft as a core necessity, it is not a valid business model.

AI is overhyped and is fleecing the eyes of the American public. There is no public demand for this technology or its integration into other technologies. It's forced application is creating expenses and complications for the American public.
