

3/13/2025 via FDMS

This 'action plan' shows a tremendous amount of short-sightedness and lack of robust research or insight. It is plainly in favor of one major AI company and shows a complete lack of regard for literally anyone else and the tremendous amount of red flags active in their company, including (but not limited to): the hundreds of thousands of citizens that AI company is currently stealing from who are actively (successfully) suing them, their total lack to turn a profit despite BILLIONS in investment, their constant movement of the goalposts for their general artificial intelligence because they know they are nowhere near actually achieving it, to their lack of actually managing to generate much of anything of actual value. Yeah, they have a chat bot, but all that's managed to do is make user experiences across the world worse. People are actively hating AI more and more because for all the shouting they've done they've only managed to make a over-hyped plagiarism machine. I've seen this reflected in current buying trends. People actively want a product LESS if AI (meaning image and text generation) is involved. Why should the government be giving ANY kind of preferential treatment, ESPECIALLY the ability to re-work laws in their favor, to a company that's primary export is a lot of useless bull%^&*&? All this will do is actively push even more of the USA's best and brightest to leave the country. You want the USA to remain a power-house? Then support the people behind the ideas OpenAI is currently trying to rip off, not the company whose definition of 'general artificial intelligence' changes every two months because they can't follow through with a goal despite more money invested in them than nearly every other business in existence.