I'm a U.S. citizen whose profession is in the art and game development industries. I have grave concerns that removing the "guardrails" or so-called "burdens" on AI development would only serve to enrich the people who own companies like OpenAI, while destroying entire sectors of industry in this country.

Making an exemption to copyright law, for example, for a private corporation, so that they can steal the intellectual property of and replace the jobs of millions of hard-working tax-paying Americans is absurd.

OpenAI isn't curing cancer. Other companies are working on very different technology that's making progress on that front, and they're not training their data on every book, website, and movie frame ever made. If they want some kind of exemption for a medical AI that will help Americans? Give it to them with the condition that what it produces cannot be used for profit.

Large language models are not defending the U.S. from external threats. They say that they'll be able to do all of that and more when they make a perfect "AGI", as soon as they have enough money and resources. Yet all we have from them and similar companies are chatbots that will confidently feed us hallucinations and wrong information, and can generate mountains of shiny but flawed visual art. Even the semi-functional models that can produce workable code are becoming a crutch for programmers, ultimately resulting in the loss of skill and comprehension. LLM AI use in schools are doing the same to students. Universally adopting and relying on these technologies will make us weaker, not stronger.

If our government gives huge AI companies free rein, and countless passes and second-chances to perfect a flawed, inconsistent, and untrustworthy series of products, all while using their technology for personal profit at the expense of actual workers in this country, what are we accomplishing?

That would be worse than the biggest bailout in history, and would be selling out the citizens of this country. I am firmly against it.
