Hello! I am writing in with my public comment on the AI Action Plan.

As a person that works in print, marketing, and graphic design, I can tell you that the widespread immunity from copyright infringement that would be afforded by the AIAP would be absolutely disastrous. As it stands, AI-generated images have become a plague upon the industry - their low-quality resolution as well as nonsensical and sometimes aberrant content has proven to be difficult to work with, on a technical level. AI generated content frequently fails to follow the standard procedures necessary to insure ease of printing, and thus wastes thousands of dollars of time to reformat.

While I work in print and design, I nevertheless know a number of people who make their living as illustrators. AI generated imaging is currently diluting the market with a flood of extremely low-quality visuals, taking jobs from millions of Americans. People WANT to work - they WANT to show their mastery of craft. AI not only HARMS the job market of a whole group of professionals, but outputs atrocious 'content' which only serves to diminish our visual lexicon. I would almost describe them as Chinese knockoffs.

AI imaging also serves as an overall societal hazard. It gives anyone, including malign foreign actors, the power to generate 'fake news'. Anyone could wholesale fabricate fake images of important political figures doing things they have not done, meeting with people they disapprove of, or saying things they have not.

In closing, I would implore you to not only reconsider the AI Action Plan, but to actually institute MORE restrictions on AI-generated material. I would also like to thank you for your time reading my comments, and hope you have a good day!
