The futility of this message weighs on me, but I will not wait for a future that does not have anything for me without at minimum making my voice heard.

All of human history and progress has been contingent upon the integrity of recorded information. Generative AI, as it's being used by the tech industry right now, serves to subvert the integrity of everything human beings touch. It swallows up years of human labor over night and turns a substantial profit off that labor by alienating it from the very people responsible.

I am not raw material to be mined. My work is not raw material to be mined. My thoughts are not raw material to be mined. If the tech industry wants more data, make them pay for it. If my work is going to be used to make someone else obscenely rich, even if what I contributed was worth only fractions of a cent, I should be entitled to it and I should have a say in whether my information is going to be used and copied in the first place.
