The field of AI is being gate-kept by computer scientists who think because they programmed the tool or have a deep understanding of algorithms and computer science, they deserve to be the only ones in the field. Demand AI be governed by makers and users, coders and custodians, innovators and ethicists - or watch democracy itself become another algorithm to be hacked. Did those who landed on Normandy work in the factory making the guns? The Wright Brothers engineered flight, but pilots, regulators, and passengers shaped its evolution. Henry Ford mass-produced cars, but society-built highways, safety laws, and public transit Break the status quo when hiring AI USERS - not PROGRAMMERS. The AI revolution is being hijacked by a cabal of elites and code-obsessed engineers who think their GitHub commits give them divine right to dictate humanity's future. Meanwhile, China's 100+ AI Innovation Zones - run by farmers, factory bosses, and party hacks - are eating our lunch with brute-force experimentation, while America's timid tech elite cling to their share h algorithms like sacred texts. To conservatives: These Silicon Valley "experts" are squandering American dominance. They'd rather virtue-signal about "ethical AI" in air-conditioned conferences than unleash the entrepreneurs, mechanics, and soldiers who could weaponize AI to outpace China's ruthless hustle. Beijing doesn't ask PhDs for permission to test facial recognition on 1 billion people - they act. We're too busy gatekeeping job listings with "Python proficiency" to let a Midwest factory foreman reimagine AI-driven manufacturing. To progressives: Wake up! By letting Silicon Valley computer scientists monopolize AI development, we're replicating the same exclusionary systems we claim to hate. China's innovation zones - for all their dystopian risks - at least include street vendors, miners, and state hacks in their AI experiments. Meanwhile, our "inclusive" tech class shuts out teachers, nurses, and union reps from shaping AI tools that will automate their jobs. If only the privileged get to code the future, whose biases get hardwired? Here's the truth: China's AI isn't better - it's hungrier. They'll let a Shenzhen sweatshop boss plug ChatGPT into a drone assembly line tomorrow, no ethics or institutional review board required. America? We've got Ivy League grads writing 10-page fairness manifestos while China gobbles rare earth minerals drag and dropping patents. We're losing because our "experts" value technical purity over real-world grit. Break the cult of credentials. Let the red-state farmer use AI to repair his own Tractor. Let the Bronx teacher use ChatGPT to help teach. Let veterans do what they want with it; they served our country. If we don't democratize AI hiring- fast - we'll be ruled by two tyrannies. China's ruthless pragmatism and our own arrogant technocracy. The stakes? freedom itself. This is not a partisan issue - it's a war for the soul of the next generation, waged by algorithms weaponized to addict, radicalize, and commodify our children. Corporations like Meta - shielded by armies of lobbyists - prioritize profit over human dignity, turning screens into digital opium while dodging accountability with performative outrage. They exploit your child's mind, harvesting data and attention spans, yet demand we treat them as "innovators," not predators. Meanwhile, authoritarian regimes like China enforce draconian safeguards - one hour of gaming weekly for minors - because even dictators recognize unchecked tech erodes societal control. Yet in America, bipartisan cowardice lets CEOs plunder our children's futures. Conservatives tolerate it, dismissing 18+ for Instagram as "government overreach," while progressives cower, fearing criticism of... losing money. This dystopia where kids are lab rats for Silicon Valley's greed. This is cultural suicide. If we fail to act, the next generation won't just speak Mandarin in classrooms - they'll inherit a world where their thoughts, relationships, and freedoms are auctioned to the highest bidder. Parents lose. Did you know if Tik Tok's algorithm sees a young American looking at content to enlist in the military, they will start seeing videos on doing drugs and be recommended to follow drug dealers. How is this allowed on our soil? Where is the outrage? The left won't admit that "innovation" has become exploitation. The right won't confront corporations shredding family values for profit. Politicians protect donors, not kids. Your grandchild's future? Sold for stock surges and shareholder smiles as they are taught elementary school in Chinese. This isn't about red or blue - it's about human dignity versus algorithmic tyranny. If we value freedom, family, or a functioning society, we'll tear down this normalized exploitation.
