I'm writing to submit a public comment on the AI action plan. As a publishing industry employee and a professional writer, I am concerned about the fact that all generative AI relies on digested and regurgitated intellectual property used without permission. The results have no creative or efficiency value that justifies their baseline lack of ethics; indeed, without strenuous human involvement generative AI is inaccurate at best, potentially dangerously inaccurate. (See, for instance, this new study from the Columbia Journalism Review: https://www.cjr.org/tow_center/we-compared-eight-ai-search-engines-theyre-all-bad-at-citing-news.php)

In short, this is a technology that turns stolen material into worthless junk; why are we giving it a second thought?

Sincerely,
Jess Zimmerman
