AI is powerful but it is founded on abuse and manipulation. We have the power to see a world infused with AI responsibly, but that is not yet the world we live in. We have to address the issues unchecked power over such technology presents. Artists, scientists, academics and writers deserve better than to have their work stolen and regurgitated with no plan in place to compensate them or regulate the people taking advantage of them. Technology has moved faster than our institutions can properly react and adapt. Ubiquitous elements of American culture and daily life are being stripped of their meaning and agency. We must address the impact these technologies have on people's livelihood. The most powerful companies in the world want the government to take a back seat and allow them to do whatever they want to enrich themselves on the back of decades of hard human labor striving for a better world. We cannot abandon people to the whims of the rich who only see AI as an excuse to extract value for shareholders. We cannot surrender our democracy or our security to the whims of AI trained by malicious actors. - Me, Luke Dunlap
