Allowing favored entities to use copyrighted material without permission of or compensation to the copyright holders violates US laws regarding copyright protection, and it makes a joke of any protests the US may make when foreign entities appropriate the intellectual property of American businesses and individuals. I am so opposed to this plan that there isn't even a word for how angry it makes me, that my own government would consider allowing this. AI companies have the entire uncopyrighted libraries, film archives and museums of the world to use for LLM development and machine learning without stealing the work product of those still holding copyrights and earning a living from them.

In short, NO.
