As an animator working in the industry, it has never been more important than this moment to protect the copyright system that the U.S has been built on.

The human creativity that we enjoy every day, and give for granted, is only possible because of artists being fairly compensated for the use of their work.

Now these few multi-billion-dollar companies are coming in, and using all this creativity, without consent, credit, or fair payment, and just assuming they can use it to train the very models that want to replace this creativity, with a regurgitation of these artists work.

In what world is the benefit of a few companies, of very few people, more important than the livelihoods of hundreds of thousands?

This would also be the death of true creativity.

Please protect copyright. Artists must be able to opt-out from having their work used by these companies. Copyright laws must be respected. And those who do want to participate must be fairly remunerated.

A.I training is theft as it stands right now.

There is no excuse and no threat more important than this.

Manu Mercurial,

Animator working for clients like Disney, Cartoon Network, Studio Pierrot..
