As an illustrator, I find it impervious that we follow the current laws set in place for AI development. Having my work be stolen and used for AI development, with no kind of repercussions or consultation, is extremely unacceptable and unappealing. There have been many instances of my fellow artists being accused of AI with little to no proof, and these claims have put their creative careers at risk, if not jeopardizing it entirely. Many use their creative works as a means of income, a means that AI can entirely uproot, due to its nature and many not wanting to support it in a creative space. Ai art takes away the integrity of art, and insults its meaning as a whole. Art is something YOU create, not something you can just ask a robot to make for you. As some may have already mentioned, there is a very exploitable loophole present. If the copyright and trademark laws become less lenient, then other places can feed their own AI's to access America's data and intellectual property, putting the U.S at huge risk. AI should be used in favor of us and what we struggle to achieve, not against us and our aspirations and livelihood.
