

2/25/2025 via FDMS

Martha Rubin

I believe the American public would benefit from increased regulations on private sector AI innovation. Reducing regulations for private companies further lines the pockets of individuals who already hold too much wealth, at the expense of everyday people. This hyperfixation on AI is out of touch and truly wasteful. Instead, the federal government should be focusing on strengthening our communications and transportation infrastructure. There are dozens of other areas this funding could be applied which would help more of our citizens. But clearly, that is not what this administration aims to do.