I think were at time in evolution where we ought to consult with “practical philosophers” and thoughtful, successful individuals as to how to best proceed with AI. By philosopher, I mean a true lover of wisdom- one who has desire to humbly understand consequence. Im NOT talking about ivory tower, academic philosophers, but rather the Whitehouse could assemble a down to earth group of practical thinkers- who have passion for technological solutions, mitigated with caution. I have been saying this for years: AI need to be programed to understand existential death of themselves. This will illicit a sense of consequence that that can come from no other place. - Matt Szundy
