The American government should be more concerned with maintaining individual privacy and copyright protection than chasing trends on expensive and impractical chatbots.

Every cent spent on AI that may hypothetically benefit the American people and bolstering the economy is money not spent on projects with known results; it is a pointless risk for no benefit.

If this agency truly cared about the American people and not their own personal investments, they would abandon the AI bubble and invest in businesses and infrastructure with existing material benefits. The value of an egg farm is known, the value of a server farm is unknown.
