The use of any AI, generative or not, MUST be strictly regulated. The idea that the USA has to attain superiority over China in the race for AI is grotesquely similar to the race for domination of the mine shafts that Dr. Strangelove's character exclaimed at the end of that satirical film from 1964! To beat the Russians to the control over the mine shafts in the earth to protect against the nuclear fallout that was about to happen when the US accidentally attacked the USSR with a nuclear bomb.

There is an hysterical knee-jerk reaction by the entire current administration to have worldwide domination including the absurd ideas of buying Greenland, annexing Canada as the 521st state and controlling the Panama Canal, and that I fear is just the beginning.

We must first protect our civil liberties from being stripped away under the guise of fear of China overtaking us in the race for better AI. And while they are proposing that the administration has cozied up to the tech giants who donated millions to get the president elected. They are the ones who want to loosen the protections for their own financial gain only, not to be in the best interests of the people of the US. The federal government must not leave self-regulation as the guide rails to the implementation of AI which will decimate all of our first amendment rights, privacy and more.

It must be regulated by a department of the government free from anyone or anything with a financial interest at stake.
