

Vimala Pasupathi

AI innovation and US AI Domination are not goals that exceed the health and safety of human beings. So far those phrases have meant stealing the work of American workers, including writers and artists. Regulations should exist to protect intellectual property and companies from engaging in unscrupulous, unethical behaviors. The environment is also impacted negatively from a lack of regulation, so regulation that understands the resource demands of AI is crucial for the health of the planet. We shouldn't lose water because somebody wants to use ChatGPT instead of a regular web search to do something they could do on their own without AI or without electricity even. Books exist still. We the American public are getting AI forced on us, not out of market interests and need, but out of power and influence, the false need of bailing out companies and CEOs who have lost venture capital on these programs. The least the government could do is acknowledge that these tech companies are subject to it and shouldn't be allowed to operate without checks that ensure safety for people. real intelligence.